HOLIDAY OF OPERA IN TWO THEATRES

"Hansel and Gretel" at Century and "Parsifal" at Metropolitan.

*MANON LESCAUT' FOLLOWS

Puccini's Opera With Bori and Caruso Offered to Subscribers.

Grace before meat is often condensed into those familiar words "For what we are about to receive make us thankful. Those who went out in search of musical delights as the pastimes of their holiday yesterday were on the whole able to give thanks without the aid of a preliminary petition. Three operatic performances occupied the day, and one of them was considerable sorts. This last took place in the afternoon at the Continuous place. in the afternoon at the Century Opera-House, where the shining faces of many children betokened a time of much enjoy-

The dances arranged by Luigi Albertieri were of the national types familiar to theatre roers, Russian, Slavic, Hungarian, Italian. dance of Alberta Rasen and the Ronneshepherd dance by Jeanne Cartier and Edmund Makalif gave the spectators the argest amount of pleasure.

There is one thing to be said about "Hansel and Gretel," to wit, that it is very hard to spoil it. There was little enough of delicacy or imagination in the representation of yesterday afternoon, yet the humor and the fantasy of the story could not be obliterated. There was barely a reminiscence in the number of the story could not be obliterated. reminiscence in the musical interpretation of the solemn travesty of Wagner by Humperdinck and the glories of the com-poser's instrumentation were dim, yet the music was still good to hear.

Gladys Chandler was the Uansel and Mary Carson the Gretel. These two singably, acted with some spirit and meaning, and brought into the fairy story about all of the atmosphere which was present. Bertram Peacock sang the music of the Pather with rigorous correctness, but little else. Kathleen Howard was the witch and Mr. Nicosia conducted.
At the Metropolitica Opera House the day of thanksgiving was observed in a graver spirit, as became an institution of more imposing pretensions. Since Heinich Conried wrested from the depths of Bayreuth the Wagnerian gold of "Par-sifal" this sacred stage festival play has become a local ceremonial. It now appears in the list of each season's activities at the Metropolitan as a modern "sacra rappresentazione," reserved for religious feasts or for the instruction of a stiff necked generation.

The patrons of the house have accepted position claimed for this opera by manager. They bow their heads when they enter the theatre and they sit through the impressive first act reverently. It has been conceded that people may applaud the more fleshly second act.

life is to them an empty dream.

The performance of "Parsifal" yesterday enlisted the services of interpreters who have been seen and heard often who have been seen and heard often in the same roles. Mme. Fremstad as Kundry, Mr. Jorn as Parsifal, Mr. Well as Amfortas, Mr. Goritz as Klingsor, and Mr. Witherspoon as Gurnemant were the chief laborers in the vineyard, while Mr. Hertz presided in the conductor's chair with his familiar energy.

The performance was one of those ich are happy in the finding of the at the outset. The opening scenes at the outset. The opening scenes at the outset. The performance was one of those which are happy in the finding of the key at the outset. The opening scenes fell readily into the right "stimmung." as the Germans will call it, and thenceforward all went well. Of the special merits of the individual interpretations it is quite unnecessary to speak at this time. They are too well known to call the comparation.

The day having been given over to pious devotion, recreation was offered in the evning to the regular Thursday subscribers) by a representation of Puc-cini's "Manon Lescaut," an opera which is is now well known to frequenters of the lof Metropolitan Opera House. the most finished singing he has done in many moons.

Miss Bori is making progress steadily. There was great beauty in her Mimi recently, beauty, tenderness and pathos. Her Manon last evening showed a larger command than heretofore of vocal finese and of dramatic delineation. The most substantial gratification to close observers of operatic art must be gained from this young soprano's improvement in the technic of the voice. A larger freedom of emission discloses more fully the true quality of her voice, which is indeed of emission discloses more fully the true quality of her voice, which is indeed lovely. Miss Bori is young and has time to make a brilliant career, which would give joy to every lover of opers.

Little more need be said about last evening's performance. Mr. Scotti was admirable as Lescaut and Mr. Polacco's conducting seemed to show that he had found the acoustics of the house again.
